Wonderful Hardihood and Nerve Displayed by Rube Burrows, the Notorious Desperado.

HE SHOWED NO FEAR FOR DEATH.

Though Covered With Revolvers, the Reckless Man Invited His Would-Be Assassins to Drink

HOW HE CALLED DOWN A MURDERER.

The Lafe of a Man in Danger Saved by the Interof the Train Robber.

THOM A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.

NEW YORK, October 12,-"Rube Burrows, the train robber who was killed in Alabama the other day," said a well-known New York contractor, "worked for me some ten years ago at Silver City, Ark. The place was then a mere mining camp and it held a little the worst crowd of men I ever saw on top of earth. Rube was only a fair

"As is usually the case in such remote places, peopled by such fellows, there was practically no law save what is carried in every man's belt or boot-leg. The deadly Winchester was always within easy reach, day or night. No man stirred out, after night especially, unless he was a walking arsenal. Shootings, stabbings and episodes of that nature were of constant occurrence. Assassinations similar to those of Clayton and the more recent attempt upon Breckenridge, were common, though, owing to the insignificance of the principals, very little would be heard of such events,

DIED WITH THEIR BOOTS ON.

"I don't believe there was a man of that gang that worked for me but had been shot or stabbed himself or had shot or stabbed somebody else. We had a graveyard out there in the hills and I believe three-fourths of its permanent residents had died with their boots on. Of course, things have changed since then and Silver City is now quite a respectable place.

"This Rube Burrows drove a team. He was a great rawboned, strapping fellow, with a cold blue eye and a nerve like iron. His last adventure in breaking jail showed the sort of a man be was for nerve. I don't believe that fellow cared any more for death than you would care for missing your dinner hour. Two men as tough as he was, who had long nourished a grudge against Rube and were waiting an opportunity to get even with him without danger to themselves, one night suddenly poked a brace of 44's plump into his face. Rube was leaning against the bar and reflecting on the uncertainties of playing fare by systems. There was a game in full blast at the back and Rube had just been cleaned out. This pair of ruffians caught him just that way.

RUBE'S COOLNESS. "Well, Rube never moved a musclenever so much as an eyelid. Those fellows thought he would go for his gun-and Rube was devilish quick on a trigger-but he didn't. If he had tried that he would have been riddled. The unexpected always hap-pens. So it did then. Rube looked them straight in the eyes, and the pistols might have been so many cucumbers so tar as he was concerned. Then he laughed con-temptuously and told the barkeeper to set up three drinks.

"I never saw such nerve! His presence of mind was wonderful! Nobody under-stood better when to fight and when not to fight than Rube Burrows. It was instinctive. He realized in a second that men who do Dably not all unless competled to do so.

"What was the result? Why, Rube afterward shot both of them, killing one. The other fellow skipped out.

Yes, we used to have high old times out there then. The boys always treated me pretty well. I got shot only four times. After one of these scraps and while my right arm was still in a sling, I walked into saloon and up against a hard crowd. One of this gang, a mun named Selter, had assassinated a man in cold blood.

A PLUCKY DETECTIVE. "The victim was an old man and was in his front yard unarmed at the time, while his slayer was in hiding, and from his am-bush put two loads of slugs through him with a double-barreled shotgun. That place was no place to serve a warrant, you'd better believe, but a Hot Springs detective named Larry Hazen, a relative of Phil Armour's, came out there at the instigation of the members of the old man's family to and up the murderer. I was driving from Hot Springs back to the mines (about 30 miles), and picked up Hazen. I told him he would go to certain death, but he was a plucky fellow and insisted on his dangerous I gave him the protection of my use at Silver City-my house was a reg-

"Now, I knew pretty well if the gang got wind of the fact that this detective had ever been my accidental companion, let alone a member of my household, they'd probably shoot my head off and permit me to explain afterward. But I was firmly convinced that nobody knew anything about the man, and thought if they did find it out afterward it would be when he had gone. had assured me that he merely came to hunt up evidence of the murder and would leave the arrest to other nutbority.

PACING DEATH.

"Well, when I sauntered into that saloon and saw the looks thrown my way I realized at once that I was a suspected man. Salter himself, the murderer, stood right there face to face with me. To say I was a trifle flustered is putting the thing mildly. My heart stopped beating for a few seconds, when I observed a peculiar mevement of Salter's right arm I expected it to stop beating forever, for he had a clever trick of a knife up the sleeve.

"I knew that knife was there when he moved over along the bar toward me just as well as if I had seen it. In fact, I saw it in my imagination gleaming through the cont. I knew that man would no more besitate to shove that blade between my ribs than he would to kick a dog. But almost any man put in a corner will face death unflinchingly. He wouldn't hunt up denger—would probably run if he had a chance—but being in tor it and no escape he will usually develop nerve enough to face the music. That is the way I felt. I asked Salter to have a drink and invited the others to join me.
"I don't drink,' he replied, gruffly. "This was considered sufficient provocation out there to kill a man, you know. But in-stead of resenting his relusal in that way, I retorted in the familiar rough language customary among that sort o: men:

BURROWS AS A PRACEMAKER.

'Ah, go to -! Take some whisky, you bloody har-put out that black bottle here!" " 'I say I don't drink!' he repeated.

se careful of my arm-"Rube Burrows stepped up. He had two big pistois strapped to him. It was a cold day, but he had no coat on and his gray flannel shirt was thrown open at the neck, displaying his hairy breast. He was fully half a head taller than me, and looked down even on Salter, who was a powerfully built man. And usualy he was cool of manner almost frigid. I was very nearly frigid my-sell, you can bet. To tackle this murderer with my one arm in a sling was quite enough. Rube Burrows was equal to a dozen ordinary men when it came to blood. It was at once apparent, however, that Salter was uncertain whether Rube was going to stand by him or stand by me, or whether he had it in for both of us. I wasn't clear on that point myself, but being in a desperate hole, anyhow, one or a dozen more of this sort could make very little difference. It was not an open question long, however, for Rube nodded to me and said, senten-" 'I drink.'

ALL HANDS DRINK.

"You see, this wouldn't have much significance here. But as the refusal of Salter nificance here. But as the refusal of Salter meant war, this voluntary offer meant just the opposite. The warm blood began again to chase up and down my spinal column.

"Right you are, said I. 'Another glass—so does Salter,' I added, suddenly turning upon him. 'You drink?'

"He sullenly poured out about four fingers of the stuff, and we put down the lieuer unanimously. You see he was afraid.

ningers of the stuff, and we put down the liquor unanimously. You see he was afraid of Rube. That ended that part of it. I found the next day that a messenger had come in ahead of me from Hot Springs and told Salter that I was piloting an officer to Silver City to arrest him for murder, and that Salter had sworn to kill me on sight, To make the thing still more interesting my big boy had been posted, and at the very moment when Rube interfered stood at the window with a Winchester covering the body of Salter. He had been watching the latter's movements all day. But for Rube Burrows, however, I dare say I should have been a dead man.

"What became of Salter? Oh, he's alive yet, I guess. Though Rube had a row with him and shot him full of holes. He went down in a faro bank the first fire, and wriggled all over the floor on his hands and knees, Rube emptying every chamber of his revolver into him and yelling at him to lie still and be finished. But Salter got over it. The daughter of the man he murdered offered $5,000 to any man who would kill him. He finally lit out for the South." CHARLES T. MURRAY.

Organize a Society to Secure and Preserve Historical Places.

WASHINGTON, October 12.-Au organization has been perfected here by the name of the "Daughters of the American Revolution." The purpose of the society is to secure and pre-serve the historical spots of America, and to erect thereon *uitable monuments to perpetu-ate the memories of the heroic deeds of men and women who aided the Revolution and created constitutional Government in America. ared constitutional Government in America.

Mrs. Benjamin Harrison has been elected President-General of the society, and Mrs. Flora Adams Darling Vice President-General-at Large in charge of the organization. A list of Vice Presidents-General and a number of other officers, including an Advisory Board, was also elected. The first undertaking by the society will be the completion of the monument to the memory of Mary Washington, mother of President George Washington, and every American is asked to send in a contribution to the Treasurer, Mrs. Colonel Marshall McDonald, of this city.

AN ENORMOUS OWL.

He Measures From Tip to Tip of Wing B tween Five and Six Feet.

PEPECIAL TELEGRAM TO THE DISPATCH. LATROBE, October 12-It is said by old hunters that south of Mechanicsburg there is an enormous owl that measures from tip to tip of wing beetween 5 and 6 feet, and uses its claws wing beetween 5 and 6 feet, and uses its claws to open fence bars. The region along the Loyalhanna is full of hunters, but thus far the owl has succeeded in fooling them all.

It is claimed by some that his owiship refuses to condescend to chickens, but lunches on young lamb and has even an eye on several young babes in the neighborhood.

Poisoned by Scrofula

Is the sad story of many lives made miserable through no fault of their own. Scrofula is more especially than any other a hereditary disease, and for this simple reason: Arising from im-pure and insufficient blood, the disease locates itself in the lymphatics, which are composed of white tissues; there is a period of feetal life when the whole body consists of white tissues, and therefore the unborn child is especially susceptible to this dreadful disease.

A Remedy for Scrofula, whether hereditary or acquired. It is Hood's Sarsaparilla, which by its powerful effect upon the blood, expels every trace of the disease and gives to the vital fluid the quality and color of health. Abscess on the Neck.

"My daughter had an abscess on her neck for five or six years, being all the time under care of physicians without any perceptible re-lief. Hood's Sarsaparilla was then recommended to me for her, and it has entirely cured her." S. THOMPSON, Hazelwood, Pittsburg,

The Present Situation Very Much Resemb

That of the Break Down of 1884. NEW YORK, October 12.-Henry Clews' FY-New York, October 12.—Henry Clews Pi-nancial Circular says: The points of greatest weakness have shown more power of resistance than was expected, and altogether the way in which the market has met the pressure of real-izings upon large blocks of stocks implies a re-serve of resource which has materially helped to sustain confidence. There are sound reasons why this should be' the case. For while, in the nature of its causes, the present situation very much resembles that which culminated in the great break down at the middle of 1884, yet within late years there has been nothing ap-proaching the extent of general speculative deproaching the extent of general speculative derangement that had existed previous to '84, nor has the recent over-construction of railroad gone to anything like the excesses of mileage or of over capitalization that prevailed in the former period. During late years, the general trade of the country has been conducted in a conservative spirit, and for much of the newly-built road there has been a certain measure of legitimate need in the unprecedentedly rapid development of our material resources. Properly speaking, therefore, the excesses for which we are now paying the penalty have been the excesses of vigor and not of weakness. For this reason we are in a position to meet the current reaction with a compactness of resource that we have never before possesed under similar situations; and the process of readjustment may therefore be expected to proceed with correspondingly more smoothness and exemption from disaster. Moreover, the reaction has set in at a period of comparative quiet in speculation at the Stock Exchange and has begun not with an inflated but a moderate range of prices for stocks. Also, it is to be considered that the position of the bank reserves permits a hope that no string may in the money market may seriously aggravate the difficulties in the stock market.

The large decline in prices during the week has been stimulated by a heavy break in Americans at London, which showed that no recuperative influence was to be hoped for from that quarter. On Friday, however—which was settling day on the London Exchange—there was an entire ausence of trouble which rumors had foreshadowed, and prices showed a disposition to follow New York on a range sufficiently above our quotations to prevent any unloading on this market. angement that had existed previous to '84, nor

We make a specialty of extra and odd sizes, what are called in the trade, "Longs and Extra Longs," "Stouts and Extra Stouts," and we carry a full line of such sizes in all the different styles of garments we We honestly believe that the man of extra size, or odd proportions, stands a better show of being fitted in a stock like ours than in most custom tailoring establishments. And for this reason: The merchant tailor, after he once cuts out a garment for you, is bound in some way to make that particular garment fit you. He partially makes the garment up into what he calls a "try on," and on this foundation he goes to work-padding here and paring there to attempt a fit. In our case, in a difficult shape, we start, not with one foundation, but a dozen. We try on coat after coat until we get one that proves very near a fit, and in this we make the alterations necessary FREE OF CHARGE.

Don't be afraid because you're not symmetrically built that we can't fit you. You select the suit-our Artistic Tailor does the rest.
